

GOING TO

"Going To" is a grammatical structure used to talk about future plans, intentions, or predictions. It is formed by using the base form of the verb "to be" (am, is, are) followed by "going to" and the base form of the main verb. Here are some key points and examples:

1. Future Plans and Intentions:

- Use "going to" to talk about something you have already decided or planned to do in the future.
- Structure: Subject + am/is/are + going to + base verb
- Examples:
 - I am going to visit my grandparents tomorrow.
 - They are going to study for the exam this weekend.

2. Future Predictions:

- Use "going to" to make predictions about future events based on evidence or current conditions.
- Structure: Subject + am/is/are + going to + base verb
- Examples:
 - Look at those dark clouds. It is going to rain soon.
 - She's not feeling well. I think she is going to be sick.

Here's a summary chart:

Use Case	Structure	Example Sentences
Future Plans	Subject + am/is/are + going to +	I am going to visit my grandparents and Intentions	base verb	tomorrow.
Future Predictions	Subject + am/is/are + going to +	Look at those dark clouds. It is going to base verb	rain soon.