

INTENSIFIERS

Intensifiers are words or phrases that are used to amplify or strengthen the meaning of an adjective or adverb. They are used to make the degree or intensity of a quality more prominent in a sentence. Here are some very basic intensifiers:

1. Very:

- "Very" is one of the most common intensifiers used to emphasize the degree of an adjective or adverb.
- It is used with both positive and negative words.
- Examples:
  - She is very happy.
  - It's very cold outside.

2. Really:

- "Really" is similar to "very" and is used to add extra emphasis to an adjective or adverb.
- It is also used with both positive and negative words.
- Examples:
  - He's really tired.
  - The food is really delicious.

3. Quite:

- "Quite" is used to indicate a moderate level of intensity or degree.
- It is often used with positive words.
- Examples:
  - She's quite talented.
  - It's quite warm today.

4. Too:

- "Too" is used to indicate an excessive or undesirable degree of an adjective or adverb.
- It often implies a negative connotation.
- Examples:
  - The coffee is too hot.
  - He's too busy to help.

Here's a summary chart:

Intensifier	Use	Example Sentences
Very	Emphasizes strongly	She is very happy.
Really	Adds extra emphasis	He's really tired.
Quite	Indicates moderate degree	She's quite talented.
Too	Indicates excessiveness	The coffee is too hot.
